

ALESUND FIRE

Once upon a time, on the 23rd of January of 1904, Alesund, a small city located in the north-west of Norway, started to burn. It was one of the most important fires in Norway.

All the city was made in wood, and unfortunately everything was burned. It is unknown why it took place.

Then all the people had to leave their homes because if not they would probably die, but fortunately only one person died, it was my father. What a terrible day!
